

I'm a cheetah

I'm the fastest land mammal on earth.
When I'm chasing my prey I'm able to run as fast as 100 km/hour. In order to be able to run that fast my body is built for speed. I hunt for middle sized prey animals like impala.
Don't be afraid when you see me, I'm scared of you and will run away when I see you.

Body

My long and thin body helps me to move through the air with ease while running

Spine

My spine flexes like a spring to help me run at high speed

Eyes

My eyes are very good, I can spot prey from as far as 5 km away

Feet

My claws and the ridges on the bottom of my feet help me to dig into the ground and provide grip, like the running spikes under your football shoes

Tear marks

The tear marks below my eyes work like sunglasses; they attract the sunlight and keep the glare of the sun out of my eyes so I can hunt during the day

Heart & Lungs

My large heart & lungs help me to get enough oxygen for running

Tail

My long and strong tail helps me steer my body and keep my balance

Coat

My tawny coat with black solid spots helps me to hide in the grass

Head

My small head and ears make me more streamlined for running
